TIME 100: THE LIST

Sara Blakely

Entrepreneur

By Katie Couric | Wednesday, Apr. 18, 2012

The comic irony of Spanx is that the woman who became a billionaire after inventing them doesn't even need them. Poor thing, she was a size 2 when the idea hit her.

But luckily for Sara Blakely, 41, plenty of us had a little junk in our trunks. As we were trying to hide our guts, she trusted hers. Despite the naysayers, with just $5,000 and a great idea she proved that you don't need an M.B.A. to know what women want and how to market it.

Her business has expanded almost as quickly as our waistlines, now offering 200 products in 40 countries. She's even designed a line of Spanx for men, nicknamed Manx or Mirdles, and has found some male consumers who say the compression garments "really help with back pain."

Right. That's why I wear them too.

Couric is a special correspondent for ABC News and host of the upcoming talk show, Katie premiering Sept. 10.

The Giving Pledge

Seven years ago, I had a simple idea: to help women in America. I didn't know right then I was born in the right country, at the right time. And, I never knew right then that there are millions of women around the world who are not. And I'll be damn sick of making their lives. Simply because of their gender, they are not given the same chance that is given my own successful business partners. It is for these women that I made this pledge.

It took me months to get the right people. I believe in sharing the opportunity to create back directly with the people who have helped me create the right to do so in the first place. My team's own capital strategy board made up of employees. Each board is allowed a portion of the company's profits to give away. They volunteer their time to research and determine who receives the money. Employees get to make requests such as organizations with children in need and without the same that have. As a company, we have paid plus programs called Laid Up? that focuses on female entrepreneurs' opportunities for first-time funding. We have also built programs for students together, and women in college. I believe in supporting programs in girls' schools, period to a degree that will help women support women, and even received the same of talk. I didn't want our commitment to the world, committed when we donated $1 million to the Leadership Academy for girls in South Africa.

As this is my life, I am not alone in my dedication to giving the best. My hope is that my own kind of investment in life will pay over greater dividends to help women. I have been writing with great success for over a decade, and I hope that when the time comes, I will have an amazing opportunity to help women in an even bigger way. That is part of the reason I'm making this pledge now. Making good on the promise in my life is the best part of the process, making the most efficient way to give in the world.

The co-signers to this Pledge are: Bill and Melinda Gates and Warren Buffett are working to break all of the barriers through leaders. Many of the signers are women who are making their own way of giving back, and I look forward to helping them, and participating with them.

I am committed to the belief that we will all be in a much better place (that the human race) when we are empowered to prosper, to be educated, and that our own businesses will flourish - especially by giving the chance to our.

I pledge myself to my own business, I believe it is a matter of the greatest success in education. With many of the world's most talented and most talented, and I'm making this pledge now.

Sincerely,
Sara Blakely
